and have taken it as I should.
 The only way in which I can account for taking the disease is this. A child died at the corner house in Boynton street after the small-pox had been there six weeks, and a girl came directly from that house to my house to get Mr. Haycock to see about burying the child. In all probability she had not smoked or cleansed in any way, and as I opened the door for her, and the air pressed in, I must have taken the infection from her.
 Reports were also circulated that other members of the family had taken the disease, none of which were true, as I am the only one of the family who had it; and as I was separated from the rest of the family, and we used so much precaution that none of them were exposed to it. LEWIS BURGIN;

A CONTRAST.—In the little town of Robbins-ton, in Maine, there are now on the stocks thirteen vessels, ranging from 300 to 1,200 tons. In the town of St. Andrews, N. B., situated nearly opposite, across the St. Croix River, a correspondent of the Boston Post, remarks, that a mill erected some years ago, remains in the precise condition in which it was left by the workmen who built it, there not being energy enough to run it, and ship-building is of course quite out of the question.

On Monday last we had a pleasant ride to Robbinston, a town which, for the last eight or ten years, has been noted for its extensive ship building. The depression in this business has, however, caused all, without an exception, who were engaged in it to entirely suspend operations. Not the sound of a hammer, save the auctioneer's, was to be heard while we were there. The contrast between the brisk, active appearance of Robbinston two or three years since, and its present dull aspect is very striking, and must be severely felt by the inhabitants. Adversity, however, always gives the opportunity for improvement. The rapid accumulation of property, in any business, is always attended with danger to the possessor. Expensive habits of living are likely to be acquired, which besides accustoming an individual to a reckless and extravagant expenditure of money, are liable to lead to the formation of habits disastrous to his real welfare.— We do not in prosperity, reflect much upon our moral condition. Our minds become intoxicated with the idea of accumulating property, and the intoxication is very likely to lead us into commission of grave errors. We become too confident, and imagine that the shafts of fate can be turned aside or evaded by our superior faculties. Adversity strips off all our false surroundings, and we may easily see ourselves as we actually are, and when fully conscious of our weaknesses, we are in a good condition to seek out and apply the proper remedies. Robbinston has great facilities for ship building, and when the business revives, as it certainly will, the men who have been engaged in it, and suffered seriously in its decline, may, if they will, be in the very best condition to start anew.— We dined with our old townsman, James W. Cox Esq., who has suffered severely by the decline in the value of vessels, but whose hospitality is as generous as ever.
